In the book “Perfection,” Author Vito Deluca explores the divine paradox of the imperfectly perfect world

Author Vito R. Deluca, Jr. asks “What if everything was perfect?” in his latest book, “Perfection.” (ISBN 978-0-6151-5554-8), Softcover Perfect Bound, 58 pp, 6 x 9, $12.95, download $6.41).

September 13, 2007 – Pelham, NH. Although he grew up with a relatively normal life in Everett, Massachusetts, author Vito Deluca experienced some trials and tribulations that lead him in a life-long search for the truth, and the need to know why the world was so crazy. During this search, he discovered the power of fasting and meditation, and through this power came the word of God and the book Perfection.

Perfection is uniquely comprised of the author’s thoughts on perfection, followed by a poem about the subject. This book is about the divine paradox of the imperfectly perfect world in which we live. Through spiritual poetry, the author challenges the readers to reexamine their views on imperfection. The book is succinct, but contains powerful messages designed to be read by a broad audience that may not otherwise take time to read a longer book containing much filler content.

Deluca has written several other books of spiritual poetry, including Life According to Vito..., 33 Poems..., and The Very First Christmas Gift. His other books, The Answer and The Gift, though not books of poetry, are very spiritual in nature as well.

“I believe (Perfection), along with all the others, are messages sent straight from God through stilling my mind and body,” says the author.
